

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #82B-15 Building Date: late 18th c.
early 19th c.
Building Name: Martha Roundell House
Location: 16301 Tanyard Road, Nottingham

Private/Residence/Occupied/Good/Inaccessible

Description

The Roundell-Thomas house is located on an embankment, south of Tanyard Road. It is frame, 1-1/2 stories in height, with a roughly rectangular plan and a gable roof with shallow extensions, integral to the roofline, on the north and south facades. These form one-story wings on the north and south facades. The original wood siding is covered with asphalt shingle and vinyl siding. The three-bay south entrance facade is a one-story kitchen wing that was added early in the 20th century. The central entrance reaches the cornice line. The east and west bays are modern windows. The three bay east and west gable ends have the central bay, a window, in the main block beneath the gable ridge. The two bay north facade faces Tanyard Road. The east bay is a six light window. The west bay is composed of an entrance closely flanked by two 2/2 windows to the east and one to the west. The entrance door is three wide vertical boards. Both door and windows intersect the cornice line at their upper edge. Rafters project where the wall meets the roof. According to the owner, a deteriorated central chimney with double stacks, was removed. The kitchen wing hides the original entrance facade of two central entrances leading to the two interior rooms. Two interior stairways at the east and west ends of the house have been removed. The house has large corner posts pegged with wooden pegs. There is a Chew family cemetery southwest of the house, but the stones are illegible.

Significance

The Martha Roundell House is near Nottingham, one of the earliest areas settled in the County. The house is significant for the age and history of its tract of land. It is one of the earliest houses in the area, probably dating from the late 18th or early 19th century. No construction date has been determined. The house is situated on a part of Mansfield, patented in 1663 and acquired by Gunder Erickson early in the eighteenth century. Erickson left the property to his daughter, Martha Roundell, who had a house in the area in 1788. The present structure could date from that time. Although it has been altered, the floor plan and information from the owner indicate an early construction date. The house was two rooms, reached by separate central entrances on the south facade. Two stairways led to a two room loft. This plan predates the arrival of the Georgian floor plan in Maryland. The parcel the house Roundell sold in 1785. The house and property had a series of owners throughout the nineteenth century, including Henry M. Chew of Nottingham from 1829 through 1854. There were Chew graves on the property whose stones have disappeared. The property was acquired by Robert Windsor in 1910 and remains in the possession of his descendants.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Roundell-Thomas house is located on an embankment set back and on the south side of Tanyard Road. The house has the appearance of great age but it also has been extensively altered. The house is frame, 1-1/2 stories in height, with a roughly rectangular plan. It has a gable roof with shallow extensions, integral to the roofline, on the north and south facades. These extensions slope down to form low one-story wings on the north and south sides of the building. The original horizontal siding was first covered with asphalt shingle and most recently by vinyl siding. The roof is of sheets of asphalt.

The three-bay south (entrance) facade is in a one-story kitchen wing that was added early in the 20th century. It is covered with vinyl siding. There is a central entrance which reaches to the cornice line. The west bay is a modern horizontal casement window of two lights. The east bay is a large, modern double louvered window.

The east and west gable ends are three bays. The central bay is in the main block of the structure, beneath the gable ridge. It is composed of a new 1/1 window on the first story and a two-light window in the loft. The first and third bays on each facade are fenestrated with modern windows of varying size and shape. There is an exterior cement block chimney placed north of the facade center line, on the west facade.

The north facade, of roughly two bays, faces Tanyard Road. The east bay is a six light window. The west bay is composed of an entrance closely flanked by two 2/2 windows to the east and one to the west. The entrance door is made of three wide vertical boards. Both door and windows have plain wood surrounds which intersect the cornice line at their upper edge. Rafters project at the point where the wall meets the roof.

According to the owner, a wide central chimney with double stacks, at the gable ridge, was removed because of its poor condition. The kitchen wing was added to the south side of the main block in the early 20th century, hiding the original entrance facade. The original facade had two central entrances leading to the two interior rooms.

According to the owner, there were two interior stairways, at the east and west ends of the house, leading to a two-room loft. The stairways have been removed and the loft closed off. According to the owner, the house has large corner posts pegged with wooden pegs. The house is supported on piers of cement and brick.

There is privately owned gravel drive serving the Roundell-Thomas house and other residences to the south. According to the owner, there is a Chew family cemetery southwest of the house along this road. The stones have been illegible for quite some time, however.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Martha Roundell House is situated near Nottingham, one of the earliest areas settled in Prince George's County. The house is significant for the age and history of its tract of land, which presently encompasses 63.7 acres. It is one of the earliest houses in the area, probably dating from the late eighteenth or very early nineteenth century. No construction date has yet been determined for it.

The Martha Roundell House is situated on a part of Mansfield, a tract patented in 1663¹ and acquired by Gunder Erickson early in the eighteenth century.² Erickson left the property to his wife and daughter, Martha Roundell.³ It is known that Roundell had a house in the area in 1788.⁴

The present structure could possibly date from that time. Although it has been altered (including the removal of a large central double-stack chimney and the addition of a one-story kitchen wing which hides the original south entrance facade) the floor plan and information from the owner indicate an early construction date.

According to the owner, the house was originally two rooms, reached by two separate central entrances on the south facade. Two stairways, one on the east and one on the west wall of the house led to a two room loft above.⁵ This type of plan predates the arrival of the Georgian floor plan in Maryland.⁶

A part of Mansfield is still in the possession of descendants of Martha Roundell. The parcel the house is on she apparently sold in 1785.⁷ The house and property had a series of owners throughout the nineteenth century. It was in possession of Henry M. Chew of Nottingham from 1829 through 1854.⁸ According to the present owner there were some Chew graves on the property, whose stones have now disappeared.⁹ The property was acquired by Robert Windsor in 1910 and remains in the possession of his descendants.¹⁰
